Tyler School of Art's M.F.A. exhibition series runs at Temple Gallery through May 22. Shows change weekly. Today through March 27, Beverly Fisher, an M.F.A. candidate in ceramics, displays her work in porcelain, "Intimate Terrain" (shown above). Fisher's opening reception is Friday from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. M.F.A. candidate Eoin Breadon's works in glass also are on display this week. See "Exhibits" for more information.

Conference focuses on Latinas and money

By targeting low-earning Latinas as well as professional women, conference organizers hope to empower the working poor, a large portion of the Latino population. According to the federal government's Current Population Survey in 1998, Latino homes have the lowest median income of any ethnic group in the United States, and more than a third rely on government funds.

The comprehensive daylong conference includes sessions on budgeting, entrepreneurship, saving for homeownership, securing resources for low-income families, and investment and financial planning. Sessions are centered around three tracks: Getting Started/The Basics; Making Your Money Work for You; and The Future is Here: Elderly Living.

"It's a great conference because it's targeted to a range of females—from the low-income to the elderly to the professionals," said Maria Ramos, a CSPCD training specialist who helped organize the event.

"This is something the Latino community desperately needs. This conference is unique because it's specific to Latina women, yet it's inclusive at the same time because it's aimed to a range of women."

Temple's installment of Las Mujeres y el Dinero is one of 10 DOL discussions aimed at Latinas across the country this year. Conference planners are inviting Latinas throughout the Northeast to Temple for the free workshops, some of which will be conducted in both English and Spanish.

Ramos stressed that while the conference emphasizes financial planning for Latinas, men and women of all ethnicities are invited to attend.
